

FUEGO by Renee Edel

Fuego is a 3-year-old bay stallion (he will be gelded before adoption) with a star. He left his father's band this summer and began a new life of hanging out with his bachelor buddies. He is still growing in height I believe, but he already has a powerful neck and chest, and strong hind-quarters from walking the rugged canyons he called home. He seems calm and mellow around people since the band he was born into sees humans regularly.

I noticed this summer that Fuego has an adventuresome spirit. He was seen on game cameras exploring far corners of the wild horse range, sometimes with another bachelor and sometimes alone. When I see a young horse doing this, I think they would make good trail horses, always wanting to explore what is over the next hill. An old horse trainer once told me that a curious horse is a good quality to have, because that is a horse that will be less fearful and less reactive in new situations. If you want a good sized and strong trail horse, Fuego would be a good mustang to consider adopting.
